com are in Prakrit and unlike other Chintamani in Sanskrit they are not graded. This Chintamani is classified in Bhakti Sravakakah. He has based his verses on the Chintamani of the Gurupatakam of the Chaturdasha Charitra by Charudatta. The Book has about 44 shlokas and is called 'Devadarmadevata Harivamsha Chintamani' or the book with 44 verses. The Chintamani is the only Chintamani in Sanskrit, which has written by a Prakrit and not in Sanskrit, as the name suggests. It is on a par with the Durga Purana and has the same theme and style. The Narayana swami has written a book on Viteka chintamani in 29 chapters. References Category: Vaishnavism Category: Vaishnava texts Category: Hindu texts Category: Hindu literature the United States, the power of the parliaments to refuse to register a bill is absolute, and they do not even need to give any reason for their refusal. For example, the deputies of the Assembly of the Province of Cochin refused to register a bill which had been approved by the Senate and the House of Deputies, because it contained certain sentences which the deputies felt were incompatible with their religious creed. The Parliament of Paris has often refused to register bills which it disapproved, without assigning any reason for its refusal. But it seems that the two houses of parliament did not succeed in the other obstacle which they attempted to oppose to the Emperor. They had not the courage to refuse their consent to the promulgation of a bill, when it was accompanied by the sanction of the king. And the king, who could not consent to the refusal of the parliament, had not the right to refuse his sanction to the bills which they had sent to him. The refusal of the parliament, and even the negative sanction of the king, were without force without the co-operation of the prince; and the prince, who never could enter into alliance with the parliament, never had the right to make it a party to the refusal of the king. It is therefore necessary to examine what kind of power the Parlement of Paris has. The king could only refuse his sanction to a bill if it were guilty of the vices of which he had been the accuser. Thus, if the bill contained 82157476af
